Access to Justice - United Nations and the Rule of Law Access to justice remains one of the fundamental principles of the rule of law. Access to justice consists of the "ability of individuals to seek and obtain a remedy through formal or informal institutions of justice for grievances." This process usually requires individuals to obtain legal representation—or at a minimum legal advice. Access to Justice: Mitigating the Justice Gap The rule of law and human rights of all people are core tenet of our modern democracy and having access to justice, is an important part of protecting those rights. However, the justice system doesn't always work well for everyone and sometimes people can't get access to justice. Access to Justice - Law Council of Australia Unequal access to justice further undermines equality in society, particularly as disadvantaged and vulnerable groups disproportionately experience legal hardship (e.g. family law,
