 The MiG-19 did not follow the logical line of development of the MiG-15 and MiG-17 because of the poor reliability of the Lyulka turbojet and it rather bears the marks of the MiG-9. Its design was inspired by a government request to create the 'fastest fighter in the world', a requirement, therefore, very similar to that which produced the U.S. North American F-100 and the Lockheed F-104.
