A study of the Windsor
(Ontario) Early

Identification Project's (WEIP's) longitudinal results on 464 students who had been kindergarten participants in the original study (1975) is described.

Attempts to test the WEIP for use with younger children revealed that the current assessment battery was unsuitable for this age group. Followup of original students through analysis of currently scored data, case study information, and interview and observational inventories indicated that the Windsor Project was performing effectively for kindergarten identification, with high program stability. Other results included that many Ss identified as at risk appeared to remain so throughout their early school career and that referral to special education was made at an early age, with the majority of referrals returning to the mainstream. Among appended material are the modified version of WEIP and a set of bibliographies on early identification. The author seeks to take the reader on a slow roller coaster ride down memory lane, halting en route at the stations of childhood, youth and adulthood. He makes the reader visit the mind of an impressionable child who can be distraught over a trivial looking matter, a youth stuck in a demanding situation, a doctor's doubts and redemption, a distressed parent, a responsible citizen and so on, all in different stories. He shares his thoughts over various issues very subtly and invites the readers to search their minds for their own stance on the same. He reminisces about a gifted classmate, muses over life, shares his misadventure as a child and then some more. He has tried to put different colors from his palette on different canvasses in a collection which promises to keep you interested through delicate twists and the occasional surprise.
