Medical tourism is an industry that has been experiencing continuous growth in recent years. It is an area of interest not only for the host countries (the suppliers), but also for countries with high medical costs (the consumers), which are typically industrialized countries. There is a need to study the nature of the industry within and across host countries to determine how this growth can lead to economic development through improved efficiency. This paper will review the strengths, weaknesses, opportunities, and threats to the medical tourism markets in Mexico and the Philippines. A PEST (political, economic, social, and technological factors) analysis will be conducted within the context of each country to determine the socio-political stability of the market infrastructure, and the obstacles to growth. The results will provide further analysis of strengths such as government initiatives and country specialization, and weaknesses such as communication problems and travel risks. The analysis of opportunities explores the nature of alliances among various industries, such as those among employers or insurance companies, healthcare providers, and medical tourism facilitators. It will also provide a comparison of the two countries by highlighting their comparative advantages, and how they differentiate themselves from other countries. Part of the threat analysis will examine the competition facing these two countries from major rivals (e.g. India, Malaysia, and Singapore) in the region. Finally, the research will consist of a review of existing literature as well as an analysis of the current policies and programs these countries are offering. Aspects of the medical tourism market that each country needs to improve in order to become leading medical tourism destinations will be identified.

Ethnic tourism has emerged as a means that is employed by many countries to facilitate economic and cultural development and to assist in the preservation of ethnic heritage. However, while ethnic tourism has the potential to bring economic and social benefits it can also significantly impact traditional cultures, ways of life and the sense of identity of ethnic groups. There is growing concern in many places about how to balance the use of ethnicity as a tourist attraction with the protection of minority cultures and the promotion of ethnic pride. Despite the fact that a substantial literature is devoted to the impacts of ethnic tourism, little research has been done on how to plan ethnic tourism attractions or to manage community impacts of tourism. This book addresses the need for more research on planning for ethnic tourism by exploring the status and enhancement of planning strategies for ethnic tourism development. The book develops the case of a well-known ethnic tourist destination in China - Xishuangbanna, Yunnan. It analyzes how ethnic tourism has been planned and developed at the study site and examines associated socio-cultural and planning issues. The authors evaluate the perspectives of four key stakeholder groups (the government, tourism entrepreneurs, ethnic minorities and tourists) on ethnic tourism through on-site observation, interviews with government officials, planners and tourism entrepreneurs, surveys of tourists and ethnic minority people, and evaluation of government policies, plans and statistics. This book is unique in its emphasis on planning and in its focus on China, rapidly emerging as a major player in tourism, with applications for tourism around the world.
