Two: Perestroika (p275) One of the major themes in Angels in America is the importance of human progress, as opposed to remaining stationary. In a world full of pain and suffering,

Kushner highlights the instinctive desire of humans to halt change and suppress the future. Part One: Millennium Approaches Part Two: Perestroika Scene 2 Scene Two begins in a flashback, to the angelic visitation three weeks earlier. In piercing, monumental tones, the Angel announces herself as the Angel of America and proclaims that Prior is a prophet. She directs Prior to remove the Sacred Prophetic Implements from their hiding place, which was supposed to have been revealed in a dream. In Part Two, Harper indulges in the fantasy that she is in Antarctica with her imaginary companion Mr. Lies. But Antarctica turns out to be Brooklyn's Prospect Park, and she is picked up by the police. With Joe nowhere to be found, Hannah comes to her rescue, tending to her in the depths of depression. Angels in America: Plot Overview | SparkNotes Angels in America, Part Two: Perestroika Summary Act 1. After a few words on the dangers of change from the world's oldest living Bolshevik, Perestroika picks up right where Millennium Approaches left off. Prior is in his bed with the angel hovering over him. He tells the angel to go away. The first act also reconnects with the play's other characters.
