Instruction Free Spirit Publishing

Research has indicated that differentiated instruction is an effective method of educating all students. However, many educators are not trained to meet the needs of all learners through differentiated instruction. As a result, there is a need for a collaborative approach to train educators to differentiate instruction through the use of enrichment strategies, questioning skills, technology and independent study. A professional development training will take place at Bowen Elementary through the research based method of peer coaching to educate and assist teachers to differentiate instruction. Throughout the training, participants will collaborate with their peer coaching partners to come up with a plan for differentiating instruction in their classrooms. Peer coaching partners will provide one another with ideas, suggestions and feedback to encourage differentiation in their classrooms.

Routledge
Collaboration 101 for teachers, parents, and school communities Teachers in both general and special education classrooms are being asked to collaborate to give all students access to the general education curriculum. The challenge is that teachers receive very little training in how to collaborate successfully. Collaborate, Communicate, and Differentiate! takes collaboration out of the abstract and applies it to daily tasks such as: Planning and differentiating instruction Communicating with families

Assessing students with diverse backgrounds and abilities Co-teaching Coordinating with all staff members
Co-Teaching for English Learners Corwin Press Collaborative teaching has the potential to improve the performance of both students and teachers. However, this method is not regularly capitalized in many schools because teachers who are assigned to co-teach often lack task-specific knowledge and skills to better prepare them. Fortunately these skills can be learned. In addition to establishing a solid foundation of teamwork skills, Teaching for Results will explain how to use the structure of co-teaching to practically and effectively implement differentiated instruction in their classrooms. This essential guide will demonstrate to readers how to use best practices in differentiated instruction in order to effectively co-manage, co-assess, co-plan, and co-instruct a diverse group of learners in any general education classroom.

"The purpose of the study is to determine if there [are] any benefits to using a variety of instructional methods in a collaborative setting and if the teaching methods significantly improve student achievement in science. Collaborative teachers are faced with challenges when implementing differentiated-instructional delivery methods in an inclusive classroom to meet the needs of a diverse group of students with a variety of learning disabilities. With the rise of students requiring inclusive services in our public school's classrooms, there is a great deal of interest in the co-teaching models of instruction. Even though co-teaching has been considered the most appropriate method of instruction, teachers often have difficulties implementing the necessary strategies. Therefore, collaborative teachers must share in their instructional delivery methods and assessments to ensure that all children have an equal opportunity to obtain a high-quality education. Before the general education teachers can instruct these students, they must ensure that they have familiarized themselves with the student's specific learning disabilities. The data was collected for six weeks using the Measure of Academic Progress, classroom observations, and formative and summative common assessments. The data indicated that students will exhibit growth in their science content, when multiple instruction strategies are implemented."--Page 6
